The Analytical Writing section will have topics on which the candidate will have to write, or a passage may be given on which questions will be asked. On the basis of the passage, the candidate will have to answer.

The syllabus for this section is vast and varied as the topic of the passage could be any topic of interest. The main idea is to focus on the structure of the answer and not the arguments presented. Remember, it is not a test of your opinion but your writing style, so it is safer to stick to a neutral opinion.

- Argument essay

In this section, you have to analyse the reasoning and then present your argument. Remember, you will be judged on how well reasoned you find a given argument. Also, check whether the argument is logically sound or not and make sure not to make any baseless assumptions. Give importance to syntax and grammar to support or stand against the critique presented in the question.

- Issue essay

In this section, you have to write an essay on the issue given to you. The candidate has to give an opinion in around 600 words. The opinion can be supportive of the given statement or candidates can give their own opinion. However, make sure to give your opinion in a properly structured manner as you will be judged on this basis.

GMAT Integrated Reasoning Syllabus

The Integrated Reasoning section is the newest addition to the GMAT Syllabus. This section tests the candidates' ability to evaluate the data presented in graph or table format. This section has 12 questions of the following type:

- Table Analysis:

This section measures candidates' ability to sort and analyze a table comprising data, like a spreadsheet, to determine the important information or the one that meets certain conditions.

- Two-Part Analysis:

Measures the candidates' skills to solve complex problems. The problems can be verbal, quantitative, or a combination of both. The format is versatile and covers a wide range of content. The candidates' ability to solve simultaneous equations, evaluate trade-offs, and discern relationships between two entities is measured.

- Multi-Source Reasoning:

It measures candidates' skills to examine data from multiple sources tables, graphics, text passages, or a combination of all the three and analyze each source of data carefully for answering multiple questions. The candidates will be asked to draw inferences and others may require you to determine whether data is important. In a few questions, candidates will have to recognize discrepancies among different sources of data.

- Graphics Interpretation:

It measures candidates' ability to interpret the information presented in a graph or graphical image (scatter plot, x/y graph, bar chart, pie chart, or statistical curve distribution) to find out relationships, and make inferences.

GMAT Quantitative Reasoning

The Quantitative Section comprises of two sections, namely Data Sufficiency and Problem Solving. In the Data Sufficiency section, there will be 18 questions and in the Problem Solving section, there will be 18 questions. The questions will be objective type and will have multiple choice answers. In this section the questions can be expected from the following math syllabus:

- Problem Solving

50% of the total questions in the GMAT Quantitative section are from the Problem Solving. It measures the candidates' skills to use logic and analytical reasoning for solving quantitative problems.

- Data Sufficiency

It measures the candidates' ability to examine a quantitative problem, identify which data is important, and determine at what point there are enough data to solve the problem.

GMAT Quant Section Topics

The topics are further divided into the following categories

Arithmetic	Algebra	Geometry
Probability	Permutation and combination	Coordinate geometry

GMAT Verbal Reasoning Syllabus

This Verbal Skills section will have 36 multiple-choice questions. This section is divided into Critical Reasoning, Reading Comprehension, and Sentence Correction. This section tests the candidates' ability to comprehend the written material, read and understand the logical relationship between the points mentioned in the passage and concepts.

- Critical Reasoning

It measures the candidates' skills to make arguments, evaluate arguments, and formulate or evaluate a plan of action.

- Reading Comprehension

It measures the candidates' skill to draw inferences, understand logical relationships between significant points, understand words and statements, and follow the development of quantitative concepts. Apart from this, the candidates will be tested on the following reading skills: inference, application, main idea, supporting the idea, logical structure, and style.

- Sentence Correction

This section measures two broad aspects of the candidates' language proficiency. The first aspect is to correct expression while referring to sentences that are grammatically and structurally sound. The second aspect is an effective expression while referring to sentences that effectively express an idea or relationship clearly, concisely, and grammatically.

Following areas will be covered in this Verbal Reasoning section:

- Critical reasoning
- Rhetorical construction of the sentences
- Sentence correction related to finding an error or omission
- Reading unseen passages
- Subject-verb agreement
- Misplace modifiers
- Countable Vs Uncountable
- Parallelism

How To Prepare For GMAT Critical Reasoning?

The GMAT critical reasoning questions are designed to be analytical and perplexing, with the use of "Jargon" encouraged and statements that appear to be in sync with one another rather than being useful to the learner. A candidate should spend less time reading and more time figuring out how to interpret controversial theories to locate evidentiary cues that will help them answer the issue.

You must decipher the meaning of the question. This will assist you in comprehending the information offered by the supposed data.

Identify the sentence's dominant and weak components, then exercise the information gathering strategy with regard to the question's contextual meaning.

Don't simply read, comprehend, summarise, and build a developed context with connected comments. It's all about taking risks and successfully putting your ability to extract the correct meaning from complex written information to the test.

How To Prepare For GMAT Sentence Correction?

- Take your time to read the entire statement.
- Review the sentence's grammatical, punctuation, and spelling construction.
- Pay attention to the parts of the phrase that aren't underlined since they may give clues to the correct answer.
- Disruptions and extensive answer options should be avoided. Remember that distortions exist to disrupt your performance's flow.
- Examine the modifiers and where they appear in the question. The modifiers in the question are frequently mixed in order to confuse the candidate. Choose the response choice that most logically connects all of the events in the phrase and eliminates repetition from the question. Look for any incorrect synonyms in the sentence that aren't consistent with the general meaning of the sentence. Determine the proper relationship between multiple turns of phrase.

How To Prepare For The IR Section Of GMAT?

- Familiarize yourself with set-based reasoning issues, which are usually about maxima and minima values.
- Practice networking and logical connectives questions.
- Enhance the concepts of Vedic Maths to their full potential. Shear calculations make up the majority of Integrated Reasoning.
- Do not waste your time rushing from one set to the next. Pick an easy set to start with and solve it using a concept test. As you regain familiarity, progress up to more challenging questions to test your understanding.
- Read all of the possible answers carefully and use the "process of elimination approach" to ensure that your solution is correct from beginning to conclusion.
- Develop your analytical skills to identify differences among the subquestions.
